

Corpus of Anglo-Saxon Stone Sculpture, Volume X

The Western Midlands

Richard Bryant

The stone sculpture of Anglo-Saxon England forms an important source for archaeologists and historians - offering fascinating insights into the thought-world of early medieval people. This volume surveys the western Midland counties of Gloucestershire, Herefordshire, Shropshire, Warwickshire and Worcestershire, and provides an analytical catalogue of the Anglo-Saxon stone sculptures of that region.

Introductory chapters set the material within an historical, topographical and art-historical context, and there are specialist contributions concerning the geology of the monuments and the analysis of surviving ninth-century paint. There is a full photographic record of each monument which includes many new illustrations.

Readership: Anglo-Saxon specialists in history, archaeology, iconography, settlement patterns, trade, and early technology. Scholars of Early Medieval period, particularly of Mercia. Local historians in Gloucestershire, Herefordshire, Shropshire, Warwickshire and Worcestershire. Local trusts, museums, dioceses, councils, etc. concerned with preservation of heritage in the area.
